This 44th Division I Men's Basketball Championship is the first one in history to use a shot clock, and many are in the Sweet 16. Two biggest upsets of the decade.

The Villanova-over-Georgetown stunner happened again. Villanova, after all, was seeded 14th in its regional, made the upset can be in the eyes of the beholder, but purely in terms of the difference in seeding numbers, this tournament already has produced the two biggest upsets of the decade. They were Villanova, State, second, third-seeded Indiana in the East regional, and Arkansas-Little Rock, also a 14th seed, over third-seeded Notre Dame in the Midwest regional.

In each case, it was a difference of 11 places in the seeding. Only one other game in the entire decade of the 1980s produced a victory for a team down more than eight places in seeding.

For men's sports, the largest number of participants were in football (66,504), basketball (17,112), outdoor track (20,189), indoor track (13,597), and soccer (15,390). Among the women's sports, basketball had the most participants (11,248), followed by outdoor track (10,914), volleyball (9,851), softball (9,410), and indoor track (8,272).

The way memory dictates, the rules were basic back when Dave Crockett and Davy Crockett were high school jocks.

There seemed only three requirement: run, jump, and shoot. And there were only the Texas Interscholastic League. You had to live in the district for at least a year. You had to pass every class.

Four subjects were required: English, math, foreign language or science, art or music, and a sort of self-salvage made from apple scraps. Of course, there were vocational courses back then, like mechanical drawing, home economics, hide-tannig, fence repair, deer-stalking and exam at SMU and brought it back to the sports department. We were going to draft him.

Most of the day

This tournament has proven to the "never again" posters that holding the ball is no way to produce upset. Another way is by pressing, attacking the ball and beating the opponent to the goal, as demonstrated by coach Kevin Johnson, Cleveland State. "We're just going to attack in waves, stealing the ball, and beating the opponent to the goal," he said. "This is just fantastic. All my prayers have been answered.""

Iowa grabs ninth consecutive wrestling crown

Iowa managed to stuff four more records into its already crowded wrestling album en route to another team title. In addition to Iowa's Marty Kistler, the Big Ten champion, who was named the tournament's most outstanding wrestler, several Iowa wrestlers improved their standing in the 167-pound title with a superior (15-3) decision over Oklahoma State's Mark V. Thies.

The Hawkeyes entered the championships without 118-pound All-American Valmir Toth, who was injured. Toth's absence was not felt as several Iowa wrestlers performed remarkably.

Roadrunners break Matadors' hold on mens swimming title

On the strength of record-setting performances and dominating efforts in relay, team and relay events, Cal State Bakersfield convincingly ended five-year reign of the University of Southern California to win the 1986 NCAA Division II Men's Swimming and Diving Championships March 15 in Orlando, Florida.

The Roadrunners rattled up a record in setting new championship records and captured their first-ever team championship. By the end of the meet, one Bakersfield swimmer had broken 11 individual records during the meet and two team records.

Sophomore Bart Frey of Bakersfield, who set 12 individual and team records, had a direct role in setting 11 of the records in 11 events during them meet.

Bart Frey, 19, a native of Boynton Beach, Florida,amentoed 12 meet records, including six in the 100- and 200-yard freestyle events. Before the meet, Bakersfield had won the 100 and 200-yard freestyle relays.

Frey and Rother led the Roadrunners to victories in the 400- and 800-yard freestyle relay and 400-yard medley relay events.

Northridge won five events, but by three-time winner Jeff Kachsl, The Matadors junior successfully defended his two 1985 individual championships. He won the 50- and 100-yard breaststroke and a record-breaking performance in the 200-yard individual medley. The 50-yard backstroke win is the first individual record in winning the 400-yard medley.
Kenyon women swim to a third straight Division III title

Kenyon swimmers won 14 events and tied for second place in the standings to clinch a third consecutive team title in the Division III Women's Swimming and Diving Championships. The meet was held March 13-15 at the C. F. Braun Natatorium in the University of Puget Sound's Hudson Memorial Pool.

U.S. Air Force was second with 403% points, while last year's runner-up, Boston College, placed third (373).

The Ladies jumped out to a 283-188 lead over U.S. Air Force on the first day of competition, scoring with victories in 13 of the 20 events.

The 100-yard backstroke (1:49.29) and 800-yard freestyle relay (8:22.41) vaulted their lead over the Tritons (535 to 79:14. Dickinson, 73:15 Cortland State, 70. Finneran in the 100-yard backstroke (57.96) will forever return the final leg of the NCAA Individual Championships.

The NCAA individual championships are expected to be held in May. The National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) has sponsored the Division I Men's Basketball Championship tournament and the Division III Women's Swimming and Diving Championships.

Although CSB Sports won the competition, the true object of the weekend was to watch the swimmers continue their quest for the NCAA's most prestigious swimming event. No, it wasn't the losses, those Saturday afternoons that felt apart as he hefted the ball in his hands. They happened to any quarterback who ever dared to play the game.

To hear him tell his story now, Kevin Anthony was not dogged by what had taken place during his football seasons at North Carolina. No, he wondered more about what would happen to him after they had gone by.

So one day last December, Anthony went to visit Dick Crum, his coach. Anthony had established an assorted of school offensive records as the Tar Heels went 10-1-1 over the past two seasons, had become a productive passer even within Crum's Stone-Age tailback left, tailback right system. He had established himself as the most prolific passer in Carolina history.

But Kevin Anthony, a two-year starter, told his coach he wouldn't be back this fall. He wanted to study internships. He has one year of eligibility remaining, but at 21 years old, there is no more room for football in his life.

"I think coach Crum thinks I'm a mature person," Anthony said, "mature enough to make a decision like this. I don't think he feels I made it out of haste. He knows I put a lot of thought into it."

And maybe the institution of college football would do well to put some thought into it, too. A conscientious young adult, Anthony is every thing the college game aspires to, an honest-to-goodness student-athlete.

What Anthony says now is he can't keep these two balls in the air, that in the system the game has created for all players, he just couldn't remain that student-athlete anymore.

"It's really a sad situation," he said, "just because of the importance placed on the game right now and how it's become a business. As long as it's headed that way, I feel the academic side of things is going to be short-changed. If you're willing to put up with the late hours, go on four or six hours of sleep a night and really limit your social activities, cut out a lot of things that other students enjoy, then you can do it."

"And that's what I've been faced with my four years here. I've put a lot into my books, and at the same time, I've put just so much time into foot ball, and it's been tough. I'll pull you in all directions."

So what Anthony is going to do is graduate in May, on time — another football anomaly — and pursue business study in graduate school, if a Rhodes scholarship candidacy doesn't pan out. He may try marketing or finance or investment banking, but he's not sure. That's another thing about college football. He hasn't had enough summer-job experience to even guess what he might want to do.

This is not, he says, a condemnation of the North Carolina football program, which is hardly a football factory. When Anthony's plans were made public, released quietly by the university's sports information department, the media's response was subdued.

Coincidentally, the same day he was named to the CoSIDA academic all-America team.

"It's a great example of what a student-athlete should be," Crum said. "He has no professional football aspirations, and I can understand his decision to spend more time on his academic work."

This was the end to a strange road.

Anthony was widely sought in 1981 when he came out of high school. His transcript was immaculate. National Honor Society, 3.70 GPA on a 4.00 scale. He settled on North Carolina largely for its academic reputation and registered as an economics major.

On the football field, he was red-shirted in 1982, served as chief backup to Scott Stankavage in 1983; and in 1984, as a sophomore in eligibility terms, he became the starting quarterback.

North Carolina went 5-5-1, but Crum, after years and years of ground-control football, opened up his game. Anthony responded with an impressive passing performance, setting off 37 touchdown passes, including total offense of 1,786 yards.

He set four more records last season, but Carolina foundered. Before then, Anthony had already started the struggle with himself.

"Just comparing the two sides of my life, I felt like my academic side seemed a lot more promising," Anthony said. "I really couldn't see putting off some of the other opportunities I had for another year. I felt like now was as good a time as any.

There are thousands of other students out there that are dying to come to Carolina," he said. "I may have gotten a break from football. It's an opportunity of a lifetime. I decided to get myself ready for the rest of my life. I think people can appreciate that."

So he met with Crum. With just two months of study remaining, Anthony holds a 3.72 GPA. He's applying to business schools at Carolina, Virginia, Indiana, Illinois and Chicago. He also hopes for some type of internship that may help finance all of this, but he's actually frelling in the dark here, too. He doesn't know what he wants to do, what interests him.

"One way that I've kind of missed out," he said, "is when you look at my resume, there's a lack of experience. And that's simply because of my having to take part in a year-round job for the past four years. I've really never had an opportunity to have a job. I've never held a job for more than a month. I've missed out on how it works and what fields I might want to get into."

But what does all this really mean? Is Jack Armstrong really dead? Are there to be no more Whizzer Whites? Bill Bradley? Too McMillen? Is this where athletics and academics have made their irrevocable split? What have the colleges done to their game? What can they do to fix it?

"I think they got rid of spring football, if they cut the schedule back to 10 games and if they really made the academic standards more stringent, I think more players would see the game as fun, see themselves as college students instead of just athletes. I think too many people are leaning on the athlete side of the student-athlete."

And that's why Kevin Anthony got out.

Ad campaign promotes Gopher women's sports

The women's athletics department at the University of Minnesota, Twin Cities, has retained an international advertising company to create a campaign to promote the school's women's sports teams.

Grey Advertising Inc. says the campaign is the first to promote intercollegiate women's sports teams.

"We're very excited. Grey has done a fantastic job catching the emotion of University of Minnesota women's athletics," says Merrily Dean Baker, director of women's athletics. "A complete marketing/ advertising strategy and campaign for women's intercollegiate athletics have never been developed anywhere in the country, to my knowledge. This campaign will help U of M women athletes get the attention they deserve," Baker says.

Increasing public awareness of women's athletics at the university is the campaign's main goal, says George Carlson, vice-president/account supervisor, Grey Minneapolis/St. Paul.

"We also want to increase attendance at U of M women's sporting events - for instance, in women's basketball, from 1,000 to 5,000 per game.

"Another goal of this campaign is to help make the women's program more financially independent of the men," he says.

Families with daughters are a special target of the campaign. "As young women want to be like (U of M football quarterback) Rickie Foggie or UM hockey players, and like to see young women make the outstanding female athletes at the university their role models - for both athletics and academic achievement," says Baker.

The campaign will consist of billboards, transstop (bus shelter) posters, and print, television and radio advertisements.

The billboards and transstop ads focus on the U of M women as dedicated athletes and students. Track and field and basketball athletes are featured first in the outdoor ads, with theme lines such as "Watch a scholar overcome a hurdle" and "Watch a scholar reach a conclusion." Advertising will be prepared for areas county, volleyball, gymnastics, swimming and diving, tennis, softball, and golf as they come into season.

"Women approach college athletics differently than men," says Ellen Hansen, head coach of the women's basketball team. "Our women are more realistic than the men. They realize there are fewer opportunities for them in professional sports and therefore they prepare for the future by building a career in their major field of study while playing sports."

In late January, a television commercial will communicate the competitive spirit and emotion of women's intercollegiate athletics by focusing on the taping of U of M women athletes' hands and feet. In the 30-second commercial, athletic tape is stripped, revealing the new Ms. logo created for the U of M women's teams. The Ms. logo appears in all the advertisements, visually distinguishing the women's athletics program from the men's.

The commercial also symbolizes the progress in the women's program at the university. When the program was in its infancy 10 years ago - when funds were extremely tight - after a gymnastics competition, the men would carefully remove their tape to give to the women gymnasts to use in their next meet.

Big Ten Commissioner Wayne Duke says, "The momentum created by this marketing thrust can have nothing but a positive effect on the women's program; the other conference members and the conference as a whole. I applaud the Minnesota women and their innovation."

Burry a unanimous selection to AP all-America basketball team

In a college basketball season loaded with outstanding guards, back- counters Johnny Dawkins of Duke and Steve Alford of Indiana were named to the Associated Press' Division I All-America first team.

St. John's (New York) 6-foot-8 center Walter Berry, the top scorer and rebounder for the Big East Conference tournament champions, was the only unanimous selection on the squad.

Maryland's Len Bias and Kentucky's Kenny Walker, both 6-8 forwards, comprised the second team.

Alford and Berry are juniors; Dawkins and Walker, all seniors, were second-team selections last season.

A panel of 10 sports writers and broadcasters made the choices.

The second team consisted of four seniors guards Scott Skiles, 6-1, of Michigan State and Dell Curry, 6-4, of Virginia Tech; 6-11 center Brad Daugherty of North Carolina and 1-9 forward Ron Harper of Miami (Ohio), plus 6-11 guards forwards Danny Manning of Kansas and Bo Davis of North Carolina.

The NCAA Committee on Infractions has adopted the Pacific-10 Conference penalties imposed upon Arizona State University in December 1985 for violations found in the men's basketball program.

A one-year probationary period is in effect in the case (December 11, 1985, to December 10, 1986), and no grant-in-aid penalties imposed in the current or incoming prospect may be awarded to any student-athlete until December 1986.

The committee's basketball coaching staff is prohibited from recruiting any student-athlete from the campus of Arizona State University prior to January 1, 1986. No grants-in-aid may be awarded to any student-athlete until December 1986. Several appointments have been made to key administrative and coaching positions at the university. and the university's efforts to develop its intercollegiate athletics program during the probationary period.

The NCAA committee was concerned that a pattern of loosening prevailing in the university's athletic department for a significant period of time in fact, this pattern of violations resulted in the third penalty that has been imposed by the Pacific-10 Conference involving five sports over a 28-month period.

The committee determined that a penalty was warranted that would severely affect the university's efforts to develop its men's basketball program for a one-year period, and that would emphasize the need for more effective monitoring programs at the institution.

The penalty also is intended, however, to provide a new basketball coaching staff a full opportunity to develop its program at the end of one-year period.

"It should be noted," Remington said, "that the committee is encouraged that several appointments have been made to place individuals who did not contribute to past violations in key administrative and coaching positions at the university, and the committee recognizes that appropriate actions are being taken to demonstrate the university's commitment to full compliance in the future.

The violations that were found included unethical conduct, recruiting violations, NCAA rules governing out-of-season practice, extra benefits to enrolled student-athletes, improper recruiting contacts, and official-paid visit limitations.

The following is the complete text of the penalty and a summary of the violations found in the case:

USOC not in favor of 'open' games featuring professionals

The United States Olympic Committee announced March 18 that it does not support an "open" Olympic Games featuring top professional competitors. It said, however, that it strongly supports allowing any U.S. professional athlete to compete in any sport other than the one for which the athlete is being paid.

The USOC said each international federation should define which athletes are "professional" in a sport. The committee said in its statement that it recognizes there are differences among the sports over what is considered to be professional.

"The Olympic Games should remain a goal for all athletes and not degenerate into simply another forum for professional athletes," said USOC President Robert H. Helmick. "Military men and women who have served this country have worked hard for the Olympic dream and amateur sports. The Olympic dream and amateur sport is not interested in money." Bay said gifts of money from business people to the athletic department were legal under NCAA rules if they were channeled through the athletics department. Greyhound charters all season long. And that adds up to big returns for team-up with Greyhound and see what kind of sports we really are. The fastest-growing men's sports are soccer (up 12 percent), field hockey (down 3.4 percent), fencing and golf. Over the period, gymnastics, field hockey and fencing have dropped each year. Tabsulations of the key data reviewed by the Long Range Planning Committee accompany this article on page 1.

Bay rejects 'bonus' for new coach
Ohio State University athletics director Richard Bay has said thanks, but no thanks to area businessmen who offered to raise $100,000 to help him find a new basketball coach.

"I had a breakfast meeting with them to discuss our new facilities," Bay said, "and they mentioned the business community would help get a new coach. I was grateful.

"Ultimately, I might need some modest help, but I don't now. Ohio State is looking for a successor to Elton Miller, whom Bay fired February 3 near the end of a 14-14 season.

"I haven't had a single guy who was not interested in Ohio State say he was not interested because of money," Bay continued. He said he hasn't offered the job to anybody.

Bay said gift offers from businessmen to the new coach would be legal under NCAA rules if they were channeled through the athletics department.

"We have to extend the money," he said.

Bay said he is not bothered that several major college coaches have taken themselves out of consideration for the Ohio State post, the Associated Press reported.

"When you get closer to a second interview, and you're getting serious and talking numbers and an interview with the president, a guy has to search his conscience," Bay said. "It's not like the pro's, where you're the highest bidder. In college, you're talking about loyalty.

"One businessman who asked not to be named said his group asked the athletics department not to hire "any second-raters. We all want an experienced, top-flight coach."

The businessman added that his group was willing to raise $100,000 but did not say if it would be paid in a lump sum.

"We basically told them the money is there," Bay said. "We're up to the gala with merriment with that coaching department.

"I think they got the message."

Big Ten to develop TV plan

The Big Ten Conference has announced plans to save $1 million per year by awarding television rights to one member of the conference. This is a result of the conference's attempt to increase its revenue and reduce its financial burden. The conference has partnered with ESPN to explore opportunities and develop plans regarding a wide spectrum of communication matters.

Rasmussen will begin work immediately with his group to develop a television plan for the 1987 conference basketball season. The plan will target key markets, with special emphasis on marketing, sales, promotion and station affiliation relations. Under this new concept, the Big Ten will coordinate the production and scheduling of all conference basketball games to be televised, with the exception of those games selected for either CBS or ESPN. It is anticipated that all Big Ten Conference games will be offered for television in 1987, as well as several nonconference games in December.

"We're pleased to have a person with the expertise and background of Bill Rasmussen assess the Big Ten in its television matters," said Big Ten Commissioner Wayne Walker. "Bill is among the most respected authorities in the field of television production and development of ESPN are an indication of the success he has enjoyed with the most unpredictable world of sports television."
