Driving Impedes Scholastic Progress

The parent who complains about sports participation as hindering school work, better take a closer look at a survey of 1455 junior and senior high school students, which showed that automobile ownership hurt the modern teen-ager's performance in school. Students who own cars are more likely to be found in the lowest quarter in scholastic standings. Their grades drop even further when their study time is cut by the part time jobs they must hold to pay for the operation and maintenance of their automobiles. (From December 1959, JOHPER).
